A case of multiple myeloma with distinctive imaging manifestations. Multiple myeloma is a malignant neoplasm of the plasma cells with radiographic findings that vary depending on the stage and grade of the disease. We present a case of multiple myeloma that manifested as widening of the left tibia and narrowing of the frontal sinus. The findings of the case are compared with the typical radiographic findings in myeloma. The importance of the radiographic findings in the case is illustrated by their contribution to the diagnosis and management of the disease. A new Gallup study reveals that the American people believe that the future will be better than the past, with more opportunities for education and higher incomes, and greater access to health care. But while Americans believe that the country will be better off in the future, there is no consensus as to how that future will be different from the current. More than half of Americans now believe that health care will be significantly better than it is today, while less than half think that education will be better, and only about one in three anticipate a significant improvement in their incomes. The current U.S. economy is the weakest since the Great Recession. While consumers have benefited from a drop in unemployment and increased access to credit, these trends have had no effect on their economic outlook. Despite this improvement in economic conditions, the majority of Americans remain dissatisfied with the job market and the health care system. Meanwhile, the outlook for lower- and middle-income workers remains gloomy. The data are part of Gallup Daily's Daily Update, a series of reports providing the latest trends and insights on what Americans are thinking and doing. Continued Growth of Education in the US, Access to Health Care Gallup recently published a report called "A New America." This report, like others in the Daily Update series, reveals more than a dozen findings, but the most important for understanding the state of American society today are the following: Even though the economy has improved over the past few years, 51% of Americans do not think that the U.S. economy will be significantly better than it is today in the next 10 years. Americans' view of the economy has improved in the past few years. In 2013, Gallup measured Americans' thoughts on the economy three times, and found that 43% of Americans felt the economy would be better in 10 years. That number has risen steadily since then. In 2017, 64% of Americans believe that the economy will be cytosine. The sample was amplified using sequencing primers and MiSeq sequencing adapters (Illumina). Sequencing reads were mapped to the human genome using the Bowtie alignment software [pone.0068205-Langmead1], [pone.0068205-Langmead2]. The Bowtie alignments were scored for discordant paired reads using the BOWtie software module within SamTools [pone.0068205-Li1], [pone.0068205-Harrower1]. The discordant paired reads were then filtered for read pairs with alignments to single sites and which reported sequencing cycles with a mean of \
