To analyze the relationship between changes in mitral valve plasmimetry (leaflet area variation with flow) and mitral and aortic pressures and electrical activity, we studied 85 patients. An ultrasonic flow probe was located on the mitral valve, combined with a pulmonary artery catheter, and an 8-site aortic micromanometer. All the studied variables were directly evaluated by the patient, during a spontaneous physical activity. The overall leaflet area variation, obtained using a moving average, correlated directly and inversely to E-max (peak of electrical activity of ventricular muscle mass): for example, a 10% increase in leaflet area variation correlated with 0.012 decrease in E-max (P =.022). This association existed throughout the entire range of flow and was independent of age, body surface area, and left ventricular function. The relative variation in leaflet area was also inversely related to E-max (P =.011), but was related directly and independently with diastolic pressure (

The purpose of this investigation was to compare the physical activity measurement of a 1500-m swim, a 2000-m swim, a half-marathon, and a marathon. Twenty-one men were measured with a microcomputer activity monitor during a 2000-m swim, a 2000-m swim, a half-marathon, and a marathon on 3 separate occasions. In addition, time-distance and heart rate of exercise were determined simultaneously. The activity monitor was worn on the subjects' lower back, and was connected to a data port that transferred data to a microcomputer. A 500-m swim was included at the beginning and end of each test, in order to ensure full recovery. The data for swimming and running were compared to predicted values that were based on the energy expenditure for swimming, running, and the half-marathon. The activity monitor estimates of energy expenditure during swimming and running were $7.6 \pm 0.8 \text{ J} \times \text{kg}^{-1} \times \text{min}^{-1}$ and $31 \pm 3 \text{ J} \times$

13 Jul 2015 14:48:25 GMTCo-operative Experience 5 - Slay 'em AllTwo new skirmishes are added to the Co-operative Experience 5 title.

By adopting the visual identity "The Co-operative Experience," Funimation Entertainment has announced the new faction: Cerberus, which is an organisation that turns into robots from their human forms.

The new content was released in the Co-operative Experience 5 version 0.28-b patch for Sega's Sega Dreamcast console on Thursday. The DLC offers five characters: Fugo, Migi, Kabuto, Bansha, and Sapphire; new CGs and sprites; new sound effects and background music; and new equipment.

MangaGamer: What exactly is Cerberus? Sakaguchi Kenyo: Cerberus is an organisation that consists of some of the superheroes that have existed in the late 1980s and early '90s. They are said to be based in the island of Maug, and later a Titan was reported to have been in North America. There are three types of Cerberus. We have newly added heroes: Otsuki, Tetsuzura, and Redgriffon. We are adding key staff for Cerberus
